Neu-Ulm and Ulm—a Shared University Hub

Neu-Ulm is a relatively young city. Its origins date back to the political upheavals following the Napoleonic Wars. Under a treaty between the Kingdoms of Bavaria and Württemberg, the Danube became the border between the two states in 1810. While Ulm became part of Württemberg, the area on the right bank of the Danube remained part of Bavaria. On April 7, 1811, King Maximilian I Joseph had a municipality established there. The name "Neu-Ulm" first appeared in official records in 1814. Neu-Ulm was finally granted city status in 1869.

Today, Ulm and Neu-Ulm form a cross-state dual center with a population of just under 200,000. The Danube connects two cities that are closely intertwined not only economically and culturally but also as centers of higher education.

Neu-Ulm University of Applied Sciences (HNU) was founded in 1994, initially as a branch of the Kempten University of Applied Sciences. It has been an independent university since October 1998. It has since developed into an important center of higher education for business, information management, and health management. In 2025, HNU had approximately 4,200 students. With its steady growth and a wide range of bachelor's and master's degree programs, it has further expanded its importance to the region.

The University of Ulm was founded in 1967, making it the youngest university in Baden-Württemberg. In the 2025–26 winter semester
